Objective

The Profession of Pharmacy is an integral part of the healthcare system worldwide. Pharmacies with well-organized practice can go a long way to ensure quality health care for the patient. In the past, pharmacists were responsible for dispensing medications only. Slowly, the traditional role of pharmacists is expanding and now pharmacists are playing a role as a vital team member in the direct care of patients, especially the new generation pharmacists who have Master of Pharmacy (Pharmacy Practice) and/or Pharm.D. Pharmacists play a major role in providing healthcare services by means of community pharmacy services in rural areas where physicians are not available or where physician services are too costly for meeting the healthcare necessities. Many reforms are yet needed to improve job satisfaction among Indian pharmacists such as higher salaries, more job opportunities in government offices, recognition of pharmacists as health care professionals and changes in the Pharm.D and pharmacy curriculum. So we look at the current issues with the pharmacy profession in India and provide possible recommendations to improve job satisfaction among Indian pharmacists. Pharmacy Practice (PP), which includes clinical, community and hospital pharmacy, is referred to as healthcare in the true sense. PPs establish a vital link between doctors, nurses and patients in a social community group, with the goal of improving patient welfare and safety. Pharmacists must provide more than only distribution; they must also provide services to society, such as patient counseling, guidance and the organization of drug data for human services, suppliers and patients. For example, before the product patent was implemented in India in the early 2000s, the pharma industry thrived successfully after the amendment of new monetary reforms in India in the mid-1990s until the early 2000s. In terms of educational outcomes, the degree of student achievement in pharmacy has improved from 2012-2020 and is predicted to continue to climb due to its scope. Many pharmacy graduates have expressed an interest in medication discovery and innovation through research. It has been suggested that pharmacies play an important role in strengthening social security because they work around the clock to maintain a chain of elegant integrity on drugs, particularly during the COVID-19 pandemic. From the standpoint of regulatory authorities, PPs play a variety of roles and duties in the execution of new recommendations based on situational faults. Major challenges that pharmacists are facing today include identity as a pharmacist, lack of cohesiveness and low self-confidence as a profession; some say too many pharmacists. Pharmacists are highly qualified, well-positioned health care personnel to assist the quality care in the health care area. The designing, implementing and monitoring the therapeutic plan for the best possible specific outcomes is a responsibility of the pharmacist in coordination with other health care team members. This conference will be beneficial to the academicians and other professionals who will be enlightened by the importance of pharmacy practice and pharmaceutical sciences in today's era of fast development.
